Statement on the use of Face Coverings (2nd June 2020)

Lilli Matson, TfL's Chief Safety, Health and Environment Officer, said: "We all have a responsibility to help beat this virus, and we are asking everyone who has to use public transport for essential travel to wear a non-medical face covering over their nose and mouth throughout their journey. This is in line with the Government's and the Mayor of London's advice that face coverings can help protect other people, including our transport staff, from contracting coronavirus.

"More and more people are wearing face coverings while using the transport network, and we continue to remind people of the importance of non-medical face coverings through station announcements, posters, customer emails and our many other communication channels. We will monitor how the transport network is used as London recovers from the coronavirus, along with the latest national guidance and respond accordingly."

Tube Ridership (2nd June 2020)

A TfL spokesperson said: "Tube ridership this morning was at around 11 per cent of what it was at the same time last year. We are working hard to progressively return services to normal levels under extraordinarily difficult circumstances, with staff still off work because they fall into vulnerable categories or because they are sick or self-isolating. In keeping with the Government's plans for the national rail network, we are now operating 90 per cent of Tube services in the morning peak.

In keeping with the Government's road map, Londoners who can work from home should continue to do so. Public transport should be avoided wherever possible to help people who have no alternative means of travel and we encourage people to walk or cycle where they can, using the lanes and widened pavements being introduced across London. If public transport is the only alternative then please travel outside the busiest times, particularly in the early mornings, and allow two metre social distancing to be maintained where possible."
